“Plants of Israel”

by Hal Horwitz

Hal Horwitz, a native and resident of Richmond, VA, has photographed people, places and things -- above and below water --for over forty years. Twenty years ago he became fascinated with wildflowers and has photographed little else since. Retired from his practice of Pediatric Dentistry, he travels with his wife, Helen, to capture the beauty of wildflowers photographically. This talk will focus on the plants of Israel.

Hal has taught numerous flower photography courses. He has shown multi-media slide presentations and lectured at symposiums, orchid societies, garden clubs, wildflower societies and civic groups. Solo exhibitions have been mounted in private and public galleries and museums in the Mid-Atlantic area, and his images have been published world wide in many magazines, books, advertisements and digital productions. In addition to his work on North American wildflowers, Hal has written a book on the Wild Orchids of Israel and wrote the initial treatment on Orchidaceae for the Flora of Virginia.

On September 15, Ernest Wilson, his dog Chester and I explored Appomattox River Regional Park (Ferndale Park). Since the weather had been very dry we did not expect to find much, but apparently the park had recently gotten a very localized shower because it did not appear that dry, and we found lots of plants in bloom. Below are pictures of some of them.
